C. Thailand/Vietnam/Kampuchea -- There have been no new Vietnamese military offensives since the end of January. Current activity seems to center around the non-Communist resistance and on what may be a repetition of last year's attempts to draw KPNLF and DK forces away from the Thai border area. Although the Community is uncertain of the reason for the current lack of Vietnamese military initiatives, all agreed that further offensives can be expected in the 10-12 weeks remaining in the dry season--particularly against the base at Ban Sa Nage.

D. North Korean Reaction to Team Spirit-83 -- North Korea's readiness posture has been increased by the well-orchestrated reaction to joint US/ROK exercises in the area. The "semi-state of war alert" may have been issued to lay groundwork for an incident in the DMZ or during the upcoming Nonaligned summit. To date, however, political implications have been more significant than the North's military reaction. Pyongyang's reaction to this exercise is greater than propaganda actions have been in the past. The accompanying enhancement of readiness posture compliments total mobilization and further degrades US tactical warning time.
